the Public Library where a lot of papers which were kept on file in the Evening News office were sent after that paper failed. He said we would have to have some dates as it would be very difficult to search for those records as they are probably packed away in the cellar of the library. Mr. McQueen offered to help in the matter and wanted to know more about it, but I did not let him know that it concerned the Hall-Mills case.

Operative then went to Police Headquarters to see Inspector Ciely, who has charge of the records, but he was not around.

Operative then called on Miss Gansberg, whose parents operated the Dance Hall of that name on Washington Street, and who stated that her father and mother operated the place jointly and that they are both dead now. She was not able to give any information about the place as she was a very young girl at that time, but gave me the names of Martha and Edward Rich, who operate the Edwards Hotel on Hudson Street (I later learned that Miss Gansberg is out of her mind to some extent).

Operative then interviewed Mr. and Mrs. Rich, who stated that they operated the Flora Dance Hall across the street from Gansberg's on Washington St. about the same time the Gansbergs were operating their place. They could not remember Anna King at all. I mentioned the other names and showed them the photograph I had, but they could not remember such person. They gave me several names and addresses of people who are old timers in Hoboken and who might know her. The names are as follows: George Woods, fireman, of 317 Washington Street, whom I interviewed and who stated he could not recall such person.
